Recipes FROM

FRUITY PEBBLES TREATS

- 1 10 oz. bag mini marshmallows
- 1/4 cup butter, melted
- 6 cups Fruity pebbles or something similar

Melt butter and marshmallows in microwave bowl (careful, it can be hot!).

Pour over cereal in a greased metal bowl. Use greased spatula or buttered hands to blend thoroughly, then press into greased 9x13 cake pan...let cool, cut and EAT!

We go through desserts like this 3 to 4 times a week, but we do a batch 12 times as big!

Ideas from the Experts

Dr. Michael Zemek, associate professor and coordinator of music education, says “My music-loving household keeps singing.” He suggests finding a free, online Karaoke website to get your family singing.

Dr. Kiki Kosnick, assistant professor of French, suggests a French hopscotch-style game called “Escargot.” You can learn about it here: weefolkart.com/homeschool/play-french-escargot-game/. Or treat your family to a crepe party or virtual visit of the Louvre. Start your tour here: www.louvre.fr/en/visites-en-ligne

Katie Hanson, assistant professor of English and education, reminds there are thousands of free books on openculture.com. She’s also a fan of chalk drawings on the driveway and recommends a fun art activity with Lego blocks. See it here: frugalfun4boys.com/lego-stamping-its-art-with-bricks/

Dr. Deb Bracke, associate professor education, offers ideas for youngsters. Her first idea: Have your child cut up a picture book and re-sequence and retell the story. Or, you can mix up the illustrations and have your child put them back in order.

Deb’s second idea: Collect small objects and have your child match the object to the word you have written on a baggie. Items one might choose are flowers, pennies, nails, candles, toothpicks, etc. She added: Have your children clean out the cupboard and put the items in alphabetical order.

Susan Wolf, educational programs coordinator from the Fryxell Geology Museum, says you can learn to make an origami Augiesaurus on YouTube. She suggests searching “How To Make an Easy Origami Dinosaur.”

Dr. Rebecca Heick, assistant professor of public health, suggests a Public Health WalkAbout to help kids know that public health is things that keep us healthy and safe in the places we live, play, learn and work. She says, “This is a chance to find examples of public health in our homes and communities. Decide where you would like to do your walkabout – inside or outside. And set a time limit if you like. You can make a list of public health things you see, or even take a picture. As you find examples of public health, talk about how they help to protect and promote health for you, your family, and your community. Think about who is responsible for doing those things and the kinds of jobs they do.”

Ashley Kilker, benefits and data coordinator in human resources and mom of four, encourages kiddos who are coloring to put some of their artwork into an envelope for grandparents, shut-ins and local nursing homes.

And while you are at it, color one of the Augustana coloring sheets in all blues and golds, and send it to:
